

RETENTION HAS ROOM TO GROW

3,900 purchases reveal a loyal customer base, underdeveloped subscription adoption, and a discount pattern that deserves tighter control.

The base is loyal, but the subscription engine is underbuilt

Retention is already visible in the customer base. The next opportunity is converting repeat behavior into subscription adoption without widening discount exposure.

01 LOYALTY BASE

3,116 loyal customers, alongside 701 returning and 83 new customers.

02 SUBSCRIPTION GAP

1,053 subscribers versus 2,847 non-subscribers, while average spend is nearly flat at $59.49 versus $59.87.

03 MARGIN QUESTION

Discounts reach the highest-volume product list, creating a margin question as well as a conversion opportunity.

SO WHAT

Start with repeat buyers: the loyalty base is large, spend is comparable, and subscription adoption is the visible gap.

The analysis is decision-ready: a clean 3,900-row transaction base

SCOPE

3,900

rows

18 columns cover demographics, purchase details, and shopping behavior.

DATA QUALITY

37

missing ratings

Review ratings were imputed using the median rating for each product category.

PREPARATION

Engineered and cleaned

Age groups and purchase-frequency days were engineered; redundant promo-code data was removed before loading the cleaned data to PostgreSQL.

SO WHAT

The base is structured enough to move from description to targeted retention decisions.

Revenue is concentrated in male customers

INTERPRETATION

Male customers generate more than twice the revenue of female customers.

$157,890

MALE REVENUE

$75,191

FEMALE REVENUE

REVENUE BY GENDER

SO WHAT

Campaigns and assortment decisions should start with the segment already generating the most revenue, while testing how to grow the female contribution.

Repeat behavior is strong, but subscription conversion lags

CUSTOMER STATUS

01 3,116 loyal

02 701 returning

03 83 new

REPEAT BUYERS • >5 PURCHASES

958

SUBSCRIBERS

2,518

NOT SUBSCRIBERS

Among repeat buyers with more than five purchases, the clearest subscription audience is already inside the repeat-buyer base.

SO WHAT

The clearest subscription audience is already inside the repeat-buyer base.

Discounts are broad, not isolated

839 customers used discounts while still spending above the average purchase amount.

TOP SIGNAL

50.00%

HAT • DISCOUNT-DEPENDENT

DISCOUNT-DEPENDENT PRODUCTS

SO WHAT

Review discount logic at the product level instead of treating promotions as a blanket growth lever.

Quality and volume point to different campaign lists

QUALITY LEADERS · RATING

- Gloves 3.86
- Sandals 3.84
- Boots 3.82
- Hat 3.80
- Skirt 3.78

VOLUME LEADERS · ORDERS

- Jewelry · 171 orders in Accessories
- Blouse · 171 in Clothing
- Pants · 171 in Clothing
- Jacket · 163 in Outerwear
- Sandals · 160 in Footwear

SO WHAT

Use best-rated items to build trust and best-selling items to build reach.

Express shipping carries a modest willingness-to-pay signal

INTERPRETATION

$2.02

Express average purchase amount exceeds standard by $2.02.

A modest gap, but a useful premium-service test signal.

AVERAGE PURCHASE AMOUNT BY SHIPPING TYPE

SO WHAT

Test express shipping as a premium service cue, not just an operational option.

Young adults lead revenue, but the age groups are close

Young Adult leads at $62,143, but the spread across age groups is narrow enough to keep the broader portfolio active.

NARROW SPREAD

$6,380

TOP TO BOTTOM

TOTAL REVENUE BY AGE GROUP

SO WHAT

Prioritize young-adult acquisition, but keep the broader age portfolio active rather than overconcentrating spend.

Five moves turn the analysis into action

01

Boost subscriptions

Promote exclusive benefits to the repeat-buyer base.

02

Build loyalty

Reward returning customers and move them toward the loyal segment.

03

Review discount policy

Balance conversion gains with margin control, starting with discount-dependent products.

04

Position products deliberately

Use top-rated items for credibility and best-selling items for reach.

05

Target by value

Focus marketing on high-revenue age groups and express-shipping users.

SO WHAT

Make subscription conversion the immediate priority, then tighten discount logic and sequence campaigns around value.